

Family Violence Awareness Policy

This Family Violence Awareness Policy (“Policy”) outlines the mechanisms by which Genworth aims to identify and support consumers affected by family violence.

For the purposes of this Policy the term “family violence” applies the definition of that term “family violence” in section 4AB of the Family Law Act 1975 ‘being “violent, threatening or other behaviour by a person that coerces or controls a member of the person’s family... or causes the family member to be fearful.”

The Policy is made publicly available to ensure individuals who interact with Genworth are able to understand what mechanisms are in place to provide this support. Our employees are trained on this Policy to ensure timely, consistent and targeted assistance can be provided to individuals affected by family violence. This Policy also supports Genworth’s corporate values of ‘focus on your customer’ and ‘integrity’

How to identify individuals potentially impacted by family violence

Individuals affected by family violence may be reluctant or unable to disclose their circumstances. Genworth employees in consumer facing roles are trained to look for indications of family violence.

Training and awareness

All Genworth employees receive training to ensure they are aware of this Policy and understand how it is relevant to their role at Genworth including (as relevant) how to identify consumers potentially impacted by family violence as well as how to interact appropriately and sensitively.

This training and awareness is provided as part of new employee induction and delivered both online and face to face, as appropriate with the individual’s role.

What we expect from our employees

All employees in consumer facing roles are expected to be:

- Aware of the prevalence and effects of family violence;
- Understand how the potential impact (positive and negative) of our actions may impact consumers experiencing family violence;
- Understand the need for strict privacy and confidentiality in relation to individuals affected by family violence.

Where an employee is in a consumer facing role, they are expected to:

- Have careful and sensitive conversations with a consumer affected, or potentially affected, by family violence without disclosing to the perpetrator of such violence that the employee is aware of the family violence, or potential for violence;
- Appropriately triage matters involving potential family violence to identify matters of higher priority or for escalation;

- Refer a consumer potentially impacted by family violence to specialist services that can give further guidance;
- Know about local referral pathways and contacts for local support services; and

Understand that a consumer affected by family violence may prefer to speak to an employee of the same sex.

Protecting private and confidential information

At Genworth, we never provide personal information to a third party without their express consent including for joint accounts. We also place strict controls over the collection, storage, access and use of information pertaining to family violence or potential family violence.

We encourage employees to liaise with the Head of Operations for all consumer-related matters.

Minimising the need for individuals to repeat disclosure

It is important to minimise the number of times a customer has to repeat the disclosure of their family violence because:

- Doing so can have a traumatising effect through individuals reliving their experiences; and

Individuals may not always be in a position to talk about their circumstances. For example, the perpetrator may be present, monitoring their call or monitoring their web or mobile phone usage.

Sensitive claims handling, hardship and debt collection arrangements

We support sensitive and timely claims handling and hardship arrangements through our close working relationship with our lender customers.

We promote the ICA ‘Guide to helping customers affected by family violence’ in our working relationship with our lender customers.

Where we are aware that a consumer’s debt involves a situation of family violence we will not refer or sell that debt to a third-party debt collection agency. We perform due diligence on these agencies to ensure that they have appropriate practices for interacting with consumers.

Genworth’s collection activities and those of the third-party debt collection agencies we may sell consumer debt to comply with the “Debt collection guideline: for collectors and creditors” published by the Australian Competition and Consumer Commission and the Australian Securities and Investments Commission.

Informing Consumers

Genworth makes this Policy available on its public website as well as free of charge upon request.

Referrals to support services

Our employees will not generally be appropriately equipped to help with family violence outside the scope of insurance matters for consumers or employment matters for employees.

The list of referral bodies Genworth employees may utilise is outlined by geographic region in Appendix A.
